The Strange History of 'All Men Are Created Equal'

Equality Before God When Thomas Jefferson, at the age of thirty-three, wrote “all men are created equal,” he and his contemporaries did not take these words literally. They did not regard men—or as we would say today, persons—as equal in physical characteristics, emotional reactions, mechanical and intellectual abilities.

CREATED EQUAL

“Created Equal is the story of one exceptional American, but it’s also a story about America, a still-exceptional nation, one that for all its many faults, provides unparalleled opportunity for those willing to work hard to overcome whatever and whomever they find in their way.”
